

Excerpt from The Street.com, November 8, 2006

http://www.thestreet.com/_yahoo/funds/ratings/10320429.html?cm_ven=YAHOO&cm_cat=FREE&cm_ite=NA

TheStreet.com Ratings: Finding ETF Shorts

By Rudy Martin

Director of Research, TheStreet.com Ratings

11/8/2006 8:45 AM EST

Click here for more stories by Rudy Martin

On Tuesday we took a look at the ETFs that might deserve a spot in your portfolio.

Now we head over to the other side: which ETFs look like shorts.

....

If you believe the energy-stock move is overdone, you may want to consider selling the less-liquid, smaller ETFs such as PowerShares Wilder Clean Energy (PBW - commentary - Cramer's Take).

....

Our model prefers stable growth and returns with low expenses. The weak ratings for ETFs do not absolutely preclude the ETFs in the short portfolio from being the winners at the end of 2007. Maybe real interest rates could fall precipitously. Maybe the U.S. dollar could strengthen against the yen and yuan. And maybe U.S. GDP and worker productivity will accelerate next year. But don't bet on it.